

ELIR

An Ode to the Queen

By Kaisa, Kiur and Robin

During the 2012 Summer Olympics, the Queen was in the intro with none other than James Bond

Now... if you ask us, we think it was pretty awesome.

How often do you really see leaders of countries outside their offices?

How often do you see them doing something that is completely unrelated to their work?... Not that often, really.

Now, it is quite obvious that the leaders of countries can't all go around just spending their time parachuting and going to amusement parks and such, but it was still somewhat refreshing to see the Queen in that intro.

Also, when she later jumped out of a helicopter with a parachute during the ceremony...

Wait... well, that is certainly not the Queen... so... scratch that.

Though, I think it is important to have some fun...

...Even if you're assigned to a rather serious position.

An occupation doesn't define the person, and that's what the Queen has shown us, in a good way.

Elizabeth II, the Queen of England, still going strong

For 61 years she has been at the forefront of the country and even at the age of 86 she continues to inspire people and fulfill her duties to the highest degree.

A few more years and she'll have the longest reign time in England.

Many people see her as someone who takes her coronation oath very seriously, as someone who leads the country through thick and thin, and I don't think we're really in a position to disagree.

Everyone should show respect to the Queen of England

So let the trumpets sound in honor of the Queen! Let's all cheer for her and her diamond jubilee!

This is a time of celebration and a time to pay our respects to the Queen, so let's do exactly that!

Here's to her, and let's hope she'll be around for many more years to come!

To Elizabeth II

